It was a trip I'll never forget. It happened about six months ago, when me, my little sister, my mom and my dad went to a camping trip near the mountains. That day my sister was wearing a white shirt and some shorts. Dad said: "Put on something warm!". But my sister was ignorant and her behaviour was bewildering, as always, because she just didn't listen to him. Though, dad did put on a bizarre looking green jacket, a pair of black trousers and a warm beanie.

When we finally arrived and started setting up a tent, I heard thunder. Setting up a tent was so challenging, that it took us almost an hour. By that time the rain already started pouring. After we were done, we decided to go to sleep.

Next morning dad suggested: "Let's go climb a mountain!". He was an experienced climber and I agreed. Dad grabbed his gear and started showing me the basics of rock climbing. After a short tutorial, we started our climb. As we were reaching the height of 25 meters, I felt my foot slipping off the rock. I was confused and wasn't able to react in time, so I started falling. But then I felt a strong pull, which halted my fall. I looked up and saw my dad holding me by my leg. Thankfully, no one got hurt, but since then, I'm not very keen on mountain climbing.
