It was a trip I'll never forget. It's special, because that was the last time we went out as a family.

It happened several years ago. We're going on a picnic my mum said to me and my sister. I liked taking photos at that time, so the first thing I packed was my old camera.

We drove to the bank of a lake. It's filled with huge stones and fallen tree trunks. The lake is surrounded by forest and the view is bewildering. I took a lot of photos there, but this one is my favourite. My sister is so confused by this fact. "There is nothing special about it" she said to me once.

But in this photo mum doesn't look as old and tired as she does now. She's laughing and wrapping a blanket around her shoulders. Making her smile so wide is a challenging task now.

And dad is also in this picture. With his binocular hat on, sitting on a large stone. With such big hands and broad shoulders he looks way bigger than my tiny sister.

We stayed there for the whole day, telling stories, fishing, taking pictures.

My dad was a journalist, after this trip he was sent to another country with his team there, the civil war broke out and they vanished without a trace. We haven't heard from him since and it's the last photo of him. I know it's ignorant but I would trade all my tomorrows for just that day.
