It was a trip I'll never forget. Just the four of us, my sister Ann, her husband ~~and~~ James, little son Leo and me, against the wild nature of deep <sup>voc</sup> US forests. Undoubtedly, this adventure was dangerous and challenging. Travelling by car across the Grand Canyon and wildlife parks was not an easy task.

Initially, I was confused and scared by the idea of exploring America's nature on our own, but my sister convinced me that we would be safe.

Our "team" set off early in the morning. James, dressed in baggy coat, with his ~~hair~~ ginger hair stucked <sup>and</sup> under the baseball <sup>100</sup> cap, was driving the car, while Leo, in white T-shirt and green sneakers, was asking us numerous questions about the canyon.

On the third day of our journey in the middle of the night a heavy rain started. "I think we should find a camping place. It's too dangerous to drive in such conditions", said Ann. Her husband replied: "Don't be so ignorant. We'll be fine". But everything was a bizarre: drops of rain were bombarding our car and it was impossible to see even the white line on the road. Suddenly our car crashed into the tree. <sup>sp</sup> <sup>plur</sup> <sup>count</sup> <sup>count</sup> <sup>cut</sup>

I <sup>200</sup>woke up in the ~~morning~~ morning. The car was wrecked, the tree broken. Luckily, everyone were fine. "We could have died", - said Ann. "I know... Look, the sunrise is breathtaking!", - was my answer. The sun was beaming its rays, we were hugging each other, crying and shaking. This biwilderling beauty of the ~~sunrise~~ sunrise <sup>sp</sup> <sup>count</sup> made us realize how precious our life was. <sup>art</sup> <sup>gr</sup>
