It was a trip I'll never forget. I was six years old then. Together with my parents we went on a car trip.

One bewildering episode I remember so clear as if it all happened yesterday. We stopped at the side of the road and ~~went~~⁵⁰ out of the car. Father was wearing his striped hat that I really liked, and I wanted to put it on. But instead of giving it to me father ~~started~~^{began} challenging me to catch him, and we ~~were~~¹⁰⁰ running after each other until our legs started to hurt.

"You are as fast as a gepard", - mother told me laughing when we finally sat on the stones near our car. She wrapped a blanket around herself because cold wind began to blow. I was quite confused to hear that. "A gepard? Oh no, I'm definitely a lion!" Being an ignorant little girl, I was sure that ¹⁵⁰ as lion was the King of the Animal world, he had to be best at everything, including running.

We sat there and argued on who was the better runner. And I remember that bizarre wish that suddenly came to my head. I wanted to stay there, surrounded by endless ²⁰⁰ plains and high mountains, forever. I didn't want to return to that ordinary world of skyscrapers, cars and noise. Nature, untouched by the human hand, felt like home. And suddenly it didn't matter ~~any~~²⁵⁰ anymore who I was - lion or gepard. I was ready to become a mouse or a bird - only to be free and wild.] 256
